

LIFESTYLE · HABITS

HabitFlow.

Smart habit-building companion — screens, flow & system design

NAME	EXAM ROLL	ROLL	PLATFORM
Shimul Baidya	220419	359	Android

A System design

Habits live entirely on the device (Jetpack Compose + Room). The Coach is the one online piece — it retrieves matching strategies from a knowledge base and asks a model to turn them into suggestions.

B Core screens

The daily hub, and how a habit gets created. Four screens across this page and the next.

Home. Every habit is on the first screen, with its streak. Tap the circle to mark today done and the ring fills toward the day's goal. A broken streak turns red rather than disappearing.

New habit. Name it, pick an icon, choose how often. The Coach entry sits right before the create button — the moment a plan is most useful.

c When a habit slips

The pair that carries the project: the app notices the pattern, then turns it into something to actually do.

Habit detail. Streaks, rate and a month of check-offs. When the pattern turns bad the screen says so plainly, and offers the way out instead of leaving you to work it out.

Coach. Opens with what it noticed in your own data, not a blank chat box. Each suggestion is one tap to apply, and carries the principle it came from — that tag is the retrieved strategy, shown as its source.

Progress. Daily check-offs roll up into weekly consistency and longest streaks — movement stays visible even after a bad day.

D User flow

Home is the hub. The Coach is reachable from the two moments people need it — planning a habit, and losing one.

E Why the screens are shaped this way

Visible cue

Every habit sits on the first screen. Nothing to open, nothing to remember.

HOME

Low friction

One tap to log. When a habit stalls, the Coach shrinks it rather than pushing harder.

HOME · COACH

Unbroken chain

Streaks and the month grid make consistency something you can see and protect.

HABIT DETAIL

Recover, don't quit

A broken streak triggers help instead of guilt — the app treats a miss as data.

DETAIL · COACH